1.0 Introduction

Step 1 engages your organization in an audit to assess the equity of your Recruitment and Hiring System.

1.1 Roles and Responsibilities

The Leaders(s) of your Equity Initiative will decide who will be invited to respond to the Audit survey.

We consider the people who answer the Audit questions about the equity of the Recruitment and Hiring System to be "key respondents." These are people who have some special insights about the equity of the recruitment and hiring at your organization.

Some options include:

- 1. members of your Equity Initiative Committee,
- 2. people with responsibilities for di erent aspects of your Recruitment and Hiring System, including HR experts and managers, and
- 3. recently hired employees.

The group of people you invite to complete the Audit (that is, the key respondents) are not likely to be representative of your workforce overall. Most organizations will not ask a representative sample of their workforce to respond to the Audit because many employees may have only limited experience with and/or knowledge about the Recruitment and Hiring System.

It is important to remember the di erence between "key respondents" and a "representative sample" of your workforce when you think about the implications of the scores. For example, if the members of your Equity Initiative Committee responded to the Audit questions, you should think about the average scores as representing the perspectives of that committee (rather than representing the perspectives of "everyone" at the organization).

Directions:

The Leader(s) should collect the answer sheets from all the respondents.

Use Worksheet #3 below to compute the average scores for all of the responses to each item. First add the response scores together, and then divide by the number of people who answered the question to get an average score.
